

Once upon a time in a Sumatran forest, there lived a sunbear called Sunny and his mom. He loved to sing and dance. His dream was to be a famous singer and dancer. The contest “The Singing Idol” was coming to the jungle in a few months and Sunny had made up his mind to join the contest.

One beautiful day, as Sunny was walking down the forest, he saw Bayu, the Sumatran Tiger.

He asked Bayu, “May I sing a song for you, please?”

Bayu said, “Sure.”

In the dense Sumatran rainforest there lived an almighty tiger named Sikumbang, the king of the forest. This rich rainforest was also the home of a vast array of plants and many animals.

Sikumbang worked hand in hand with the other animals to make a beautiful dwelling for them. He helped the rhino colony build a dam to shield their habitat from flood in the rainy season. Everyone lived in harmony as Sikumbang humbly ruled the forest.

“HELP ME!” a piercing sound could be heard two miles away from the Sumatran Rainforest. That loud roar came from none other than Suti, the Sumatran tiger. Her mom rushed to her to find out why she had roared so loudly, but all she saw was a small tarantula. Suti’s mom knew this tarantula very well. His name was Talu. Both Talu and Suti looked terrified.

“Suti, you know very well that tarantula is Talu,” Suti’s mom said.
